THE OLD ENGLISH TIEBORN BARONET.
—The old English Tieborne baronetcy and estate are now involved in a nice question of identity in the English courts. The story is as follows:

Sir James Tieborne, a gruff, violent, and somewhat man, much given to hard drinking, had two sons, one named Roger, the older, and Alfred, the younger. Roger grew up a boorish boy, of lazy disposition. He purchased a commission in the army, but soon sold out, and after leaving the English army, he departed to see life and seek adventure in South America. In April, 1854, Roger embarked at Rio, dead drunk in a vessel bound for New York. This vessel (the Blanche) was never heard of from that date, and nothing being heard of Roger, and the old baronet dying soon after, all hopes of his return were given up, and the second son, Alfred, succeeded to the title and estates. Sir Alfred, however, died in 1860, leaving an infant heir, for whom it is claimed that he is the true heir of the property and rank. But old Lady Tieborne, who is of a flighty and sentimental disposition, and who never believed that her older son was dead, had been advertising in all the English and colonial papers for the lost Sir Roger. In the beginning of 1866 a man appeared in London calling himself Sir Roger Tieborne, and claimed the estate. Lady Tieborne accepted him, and gave her sanction to his claim, although other members of the family treated him as an impostor. The returning one claims to have been saved from the wreck of the Blanche, after which he went to Melbourne, where he got employment on a sheep farm, adopted the name of Thomas Castro, and married. His return to England was caused by hearing of the death of his father. On the part of the youthful heir, now four years old, it is claimed that the man calling himself Sir Roger is a Wapping baronet named Arthur Orton, who worked his way before the mast to Valparaiso, was familiar with the portions of South America supposed to have been travelled by Sir Roger, and gathered all the necessary facts concerning the Tieborne family from old servants of the family whom he met in Australia. There is a marked discrepancy in the personal of the two men—the missing Roger and the returning Roger; and many other facts go to show that they cannot be identical. But, on the other hand, his intimate knowledge of the private affairs of the Tiebornes, and his recognition as the true Sir Roger by several relatives and friends of the family, stagger the disbelief of the doubters. The case is altogether a peculiar one, and the result is difficult to forecast.

FISH CULTURE.—The tourist in Northern Bavaria often wonders where all the fine fish come from that are universally served up at every farm and herbage where he stops for dinner, as the salt sea is far distant, and there are no great rivers in the country. This is owing to the widely-extended pisciculture, which affords to the country a rich supply of most delicious fish of all kinds and at all seasons throughout the year. The whole country is dotted over with small fish-ponds; wherever there is a marshy place, or the lands need to be drained, the water is gathered into a little lake; at the foot of the hills or mountains ponds are also constructed as reservoirs for the water that comes down from the side, and the larger streams are frequently dammed up so as to overflow and form a succession of small ponds, all of which are profusely stocked with fish carefully selected for that purpose. This will account for the plenteousness of the fishy tribe and the frequency with which they are found upon the tables throughout the country hundreds of miles distant from the sea, and from the fact that many of the Bavarian peasants realize as much, and sometimes more, from their fish-crop as they do from their rich golden fields and pastures.

CURE FOR POISON.—A standing antidote for poison oak, ivy, etc., is to take hand full of quicklime, dissolve in water, let it stand half an hour, then pour the liquid on the poison. Three or four applications will never fail to cure the most aggravated cases. Poison from bees, hornets, spider bites, etc., is instantly arrested by the application of equal parts of common salt and bicarbonate of soda, well rubbed in on the place bitten or stung.

CURE FOR SORE THROAT.—A well-informed friend sends us the following: Take the whites of two eggs and beat them in with two spoonfuls of white sugar, grate in a little nutmeg, and then add a pint of lukewarm water. Stir well and drink often. Repeat the prescription if necessary. Our friend thinks it will cure the most obstinate case of hoarseness in a short time.

MISCELLANEOUS.—The indignity with which the remains of Auber, the lately deceased distinguished composer, were treated by some of the Paris Nationals is one of the foulest proceedings of that era of foul deeds. Auber's body had been placed, awaiting burial, in the vaults of the Church of the Holy Trinity, which also contained the coffins of numerous other dead people. A few days since a number of National Guards took all these coffins, that of Auber included, and tossed them into a ditch.

The recent purchaser of an old mansion in Stratford, Conn., formerly owned and occupied by the late David Brooks, while engaged in tearing down the stone chimney, came across a large earthen pot of peculiar shape and very ancient, containing species. What amount of treasure was found, the lucky individual is reluctant to state. But it is noted that after his good fortune, the gentleman who was engaged in the dry goods and grocery trade for a number of years, sold out his stock and fixtures, leased his store and retired from business.

The first fruits of the law in Ohio which enforces exemplary damages against liquor sellers on the application of the bibulous person's family, have just of St. Anger, who had to pay $20,000 to Mrs. John A. Todd for providing her husband with a little toddy.

While there were in May, 1846, or now just twenty-five years ago, engaged in the whale fishery no less than 722 vessels from the United States alone, the total number at present engaged in this business is now reduced to 278.
